Then you need to look at reinforcing the message Cameron Diaz shared in a recent interview with People magazine. I don't want to look like me when I was 25, says the 41-year-old. I like the way I look better now than when I was 25. I can't help that other people may be uncomfortable with it, but it's not my responsibility to feel OK with the fact that I'm older. I'm fine with that. I like it. The actress went on to condemn the anti-aging frenzy: There is no such thing as anti-aging, she says.
